In ship building the Americans have distant ced, on the road towards perfection, all other maritime nations, not even excepting England Their enterprising spirit and natural capacities, have enabled them to turn to singular advantage, the resources in which their immense territory abounds. They have a rare O A Buck, of Raleigh, to Miss Lucia Dow. faculty of utilising their natural riches, and by the number and beauty of their vessels they are, at this day, without equals.

At this moment, we have under our very eyes a new specimen of the perfection they have attained in the construction of ships, and of the improvements which their genius has Pearson, of Guilford county, to Miss Mary Little, suited to various wants hitherto felt. The packet " Seine," Capt. Williams, late-

York lines of packets, can barely accommodate 300 passengers, while the Seine has room for 444, exclusive of the cabin, which increases the number to 528. There are already several large packets on the New York and Liverpool lines; one of them, the "New World," lately arrived in N. York with 780 emigrants on board.

When we see the Americans thus advancing and improving in this all important branch of commerce, our national pride cannot but suffer, at the despairing slowness with which improvements are hailed in France. Our mer- Western Bacon in market. chant marine has undoubtedly greatly improved; but when compared with the enterprise of our neighbors, how we have cause to blush at the contrast with ours; while they are advancing, with giant leaps, we are but crawling, as it were, tortoise-like.

The Seine cost 250,000 francs; had she been built in France it could not have been done at any thing like that sum, and this is one of the reasons of our inferiority. And it is now frequently asked, whether it would have replenished the market, and the stock not be advisable to send some of our French naval architects to the United States, to perfect themselves in every department, and authorized to construct some large ships, whose dimensions should be fixed by Government .-The effect of this step would be to stimulate to greater emulation our ship builders, and give a new life to our marine; and our vessels would command high prices, to obtain which the American flag has frequently been made
